Jacqueline Lagrone appeared before the committee as agent for Truth Sports Bar. Her son and manager, Malachi Muhammad, also appeared before the committee to speak on behalf of a place-to-place transfer of the "Class B" license from the Truth Sports Bar located on Junction Avenue to a new location at 607 6th Street. In support of this transfer, Mr. Muhammad stressed his intent to attract new clientele by offering jazz music, sip and paint parties, First Responder Friday specials, UFC fights on TV, etc., as well as to improve the exterior of the building in tandem with the building owner. Mr. Muhammad stated that he signed a five-year lease and intends to initially serve prepackaged foods and will revisit the idea of a full kitchen down the road. Mr. Muhammad explained that he was inspired by college students walking in downtown Madison looking for a place to meet that provides the arts, and aims to mimic this feel and to provide this type of meeting place for this community.

Jim Wosley and his wife appeared to speak. Mr. Wosley spoke against the place-to-place transfer as it related to the alcohol being sold there, but also stated that he was insupport of the other intended offerings, such as food, coffee, and art. Jim Wosley also read a letter from Robert Osborne, whom was against the place-to-place transfer.

Mercedes Dzindceleta appeared to speak. She spoke against the place-to-place transfer due to her experience with previous owners who have operated bars out of the same location and did not respect her or her adjacent property, including noisiness, public urination, and traffic congestion.
